- At some point the college would benefit from understand that the network is fundamentally a learning resource and that network related decisions cannot be made by IT in isolation from learning resources. If the LRC remains limited to physical collectibles such as books, DVDs, then the LRC risks becoming increasingly irrelevant with the passage of time. The best learning support materials for some courses are now on line videos, often in YouTube. Bandwidth becomes more important than shelf space or DVD collections. LRC and IT should be joined at the hip, so to speak, and should work together to ensure support for learning across all six sites.
